

Mexico and Brazil speed up their bilateral agroalimentary trade

Both countries seek to provide healthy and safe foods for their populations

The health agencies of both countries agree to coordinate their agendas to supply healthy and safe foods for their populations

To strengthen and speed up their mutual agroalimentary trade, Mexico and Brazil agreed upon a work strategy to reach a balanced food trade, in benefit of their producers and consumers.

The SENASICA is working to ease trade restrictions and quickly address any concerns from food importers and exporters, to expand the food supply options for the Mexican population.

Sanitation is a priority subject in Mexico, and thus the agency of the Secretariat of Agriculture maintains its legal mandate to operate science-based actions and programs to provide the Mexican rural sector with the highest level of protection.

Mexico imports poultry meat from Brazil, and recently authorized the import of pork meat from the state of Santa Catarina.

See more information at: Mexico and Brazil speed up their bilateral agroalimentary trade in favor of producers and consumers